Inspired by true events.

On a beautiful fall afternoon, Brooke went to visit her aunt. She had a gorgeous Alaskan Husky with icy blue eyes that gazed up at her, as if to say, "Play? Play? Play?" His name was Ki. My aunt confessed that she could no longer provide for him as Brooke watched her aunt's heart break. Brooke just knew that Ki had to be a very special dog.

Now Brooke did not exactly have a laid back life. She worked as a fashion model in New York City. She loved her job and all the pretty clothes she had the chance to wear.

Brooke knew her career took up a lot of her time, and Ki was not well trained, but once he looked up at her with those big blue eyes, she loved Ki. Ki loved her, so she finally agreed.

The next day, Brooke went to pick up Ki. His tongue was wagging ready to give Brooke sloppy kisses. She laughed and hugged his neck, thinking what a wonderful dog, and how nice it would be to have him greet her this way every time she came home.

She picked up his leash. When Ki saw the leash he began barking and lunged back and forth on the couches. Brooke tried to catch him, but he jumped out of the way.

"Ki, it is time to go," she said sweetly. He looked up at Brooke and blinked with his big blue eyes, thinking once again, "Play? Play? Play?"

She sighed and said firmly, "Time to go!" He jumped over the side of the couch.

"Ki!" Brooke shouted and chased after him. Finally, she snapped the leash on his collar. The moment Ki felt the leash, he tore off in the other direction, yanking the leash out of her hand.

When Brooke was finally able to grab the leash, she felt like she had run a marathon. Ki, however, looked like he could run a few more marathons before he would even yawn.

As Brooke opened the front door, Ki tugged at the leash and pulled Brooke right out the door.
